“We have created a programming lineup that will connect and inform sports fans all day long on the teams and leagues they follow so passionately,” said Eric Conrad, vice president of Programming, Univision Deportes. “Univision has been bringing many of the most-watched matches to Hispanic viewers for 50 years and created Univision Deportes Network to bring expanded access to the content we know our viewers can’t get enough of. And through our partnership with Televisa, we are now able to offer U.S. audiences access to even more sports content.”

Univision Deportes Network is changing the game for viewers by offering unprecedented access to Liga Mexicana soccer games and daily sports coverage of all the action involving their favorite teams and athletes. The new network counts on more than double the amount of exclusive Liga Mexicana matches than any other network in the United States, with rights to the home games for 12 of the 18 teams within the Liga Mexicana, plus away games for the rest of the league’s teams. The network will also feature live Liga Mexicana playoff matches each season.

In addition, viewers will be able to turn to Univision Deportes Network for coverage of marquee sports events, from the 2014 FIFA World Cup and the qualifiers starting this June, to matches of the U.S. and Mexican national soccer teams, Major League Soccer, CONCACAF Champions League, FIFA 2013 Confederations Cup, FIFA Under-20 World Championships, and FIFA Under-17 World Championships, to action-packed boxing and the latest from the NFL, NBA, MLB and more.

The original programming lineup of the new network is anchored by "Univision Deportes Extra," a daily sportscast produced from the network's new state-of-the-art studios in Miami. The hour-long show will be led by a dynamic team that includes sports commentator Claudia Trejos, former Televisa sports newscaster Alejandro Berry, reporter and former soccer athlete Antonietta Collins, and sports anchor Jorge Calvo. In addition, Jaime Motta, Lindsay Casinelli and Iván Kasanzew will serve as correspondents from Los Angeles, New York and Miami, respectively. "República Deportiva" the leading Univision Network sports entertainment program, will also air on the sports network.
