ENGLEWOOD, Colo.--(BUSINESS WIRE)--Today, DISH (NASDAQ: DISH) introduced two new lightweight antennas that deliver an HD TV viewing experience for outdoor activities such as tailgating, RVing and camping. The Pathway™ X1 and X2 for DISH are two portable satellite HD TV antennas that deliver entertainment on televisions while away from home.

"Must-see games, shows and entertainment – only DISH delivers portable HD satellite antennas that make it easy and affordable for consumers to enjoy all their programming including their SiriusXM music stations wherever life takes them," said Bassil El-Khatib, DISH vice president of product management. "The Pathway X1 and X2 for DISH are the latest in portable satellite technology that brings the big game to the big screen while on the go."

Consumers can choose to receive DISH's programming on a monthly basis with no minimum term commitment. Both devices provide access to every HD English channel available to residential subscribers, as well as SiriusXM music channels within the America's Top 120 package or higher. The lightweight antennas include automatic self-pointing satellite acquisition technology that allows customers to setup and view live HD television in less than 15 minutes.

The Pathway X1 and X2 Antennas, manufactured by Winegard, are compatible with DISH's Solo HD receivers (models 411, ViP 211, ViP 211k and ViP 211z) that provide power to the antenna.
