

DISH Network Brings High-Definition NBA Hoops to Nation's Largest HD Lineup

DISH Network®, home of the best sports and movies in high definition (HD) as well as the best HD DVR in the industry, announced today that NBA TV is now included in DISH Network's industry-leading national lineup of HD programming. With 75 channels, DISH Network's continues to offer more national HD programming than any pay-TV provider in the United States.

"Bringing NBA TV HD to the home of the best sports and movies in HD is a natural move for DISH Network and a slam dunk for hoops fans," said Eric Sahl, senior vice president of Programming for DISH Network. "Pairing DISH Network's amazing picture quality with the best HD DVR anywhere will make watching all the action from home nearly every bit as exciting as going to the game."

NBA TV is a hoop fan's dream and the ultimate source for all things basketball, featuring live NBA games every week, basketball news and information, exclusive interviews with the game's greatest stars and legends, and original series spotlighting today's players and coaches as well as the most memorable moments in the NBA's history. NBA TV will offer its first HD games of the 2007-08 season on Sunday, Nov. 4.

"We are thrilled to team up with DISH Network to provide their subscribers with the opportunity to experience the powerful combination of NBA basketball and high-definition through NBA TV in HD," said NBA Deputy Commissioner and Chief Operating Officer Adam Silver.

Subscribers to America's Top 100 package with DishHD will receive NBA TV HD free on Channel 402. DishHD is available free for six months to new customers, and new DISH Network subscribers may also receive a free upgrade to the company's industry-leading and award-winning HD DVR receivers. Through Jan. 31, 2008, both current and new qualifying DISH Network DishHD customers may also enjoy up to $800 of instant savings on a variety of Sharp's most popular line of flat panel HDTVs.
